Methodology: As is the traditional process for this project, Computerworld conducted its fourth annual Techno-MBA Survey in two parts. In April through June, we asked campus recruiters nationwide to nominate the best techno-MBA programs, based on their experience hiring graduates from those programs. We also asked college and university MBA programs to nominate the best techno-MBA programs nationally, other than their own programs, based on the quality of the curricula in those programs. The results of these surveys produced our top candidates for the techno-MBA survey. As the second part of the project, this summer

Computerworld asked the colleges and universities to provide detailed information about their techno-MBA degree programs. In addition to the 25 programs listed above, the following schools were nominated as among the best, but failed to provide information about their programs: Carnegie Mellon University, MIT, Harvard University, Duke University, Stanford University and New York University.
